Investing in water is a good business, according to the board of directors of Water Business International, a global market research firm that released a report outlining the rise of the industry in 2018. Water Business estimates that the value of the global water industry will reach $1.05 trillion by 2020. Some 70 percent of that value is represented by beverage and food. The U.S. is one of the largest markets, with approximately $23 billion being spent by the country's consumers on a wide range of water-related products. What the report doesn't mention is that the U.S. is not alone in its consumption of bottled water. China and India are also among the top five water buyers, according to the report. "With packaged water products at approximately $250 billion, we estimate that the global market for water-based packaged products is approximately $1.05 trillion," the report's authors write. The report says that the global packaged water market will experience slow but steady growth through 2022. "We predict a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 4.3% from 2018 through 2022," the report says. Thyrotropin-releasing hormone-induced abnormalities of brain and pituitary function in rats are associated with an increase in hypothalamic histamine. In this study the effect of high doses of thyrotropin-releasing hormone (TRH) on hypothalamic histamine concentration and brain-pituitary function was investigated in adult Wistar rats. TRH was administered intravenously at 100 micrograms/rat, and hypothalamic histamine concentration was
