The VPN provided by Surfshark is one possible choice, offering decent prices for this increasingly common service. While VPN connections are seen as a way to become less visible to the world and are often associated with shady, secret or dangerous practices, there are plenty of reasons to use a VPN connection without actually having to be frowned upon. Privacy is one of the hottest topics, and more so the amount of it that we should be allowed. Surfshark comes to the rescue with a VPN service that does not enforce any log collection policy. It allows you to connect as many devices as you wish, including Windows, Linux, and macOS systems, iOS and Android handhelds, Xbox and PlayStation consoles or browsers such as Chrome or Firefox. It can also be used to unblock access to specific region-locked Netflix content. The listed price is modest and the features seem adequate. Provided this service works without any flaws, it could be a good purchase for anybody using this type of technology. Even if you're new to VPNs, bringing a bit more security and freedom to your network could be the next step. ## Surfshark For PC

Surfshark is a free VPN service that operates the following criteria: Sign up with a free account and gain access to a log-free connection. It is possible to use either an IP or a domain name for the connection, but only the first one offers anonymity. Connect as many devices as you like. Even if you're on a Windows laptop and use only Android tablets, you can have one VPN account per person on each of them. Unblock region-locked content on Netflix. Surfshark makes it possible to access Netflix while being located in a different region than the service's servers. Offers a dedicated DNS service that makes it faster. Offers a Tor proxy service for extra security. What is a VPN? In short, a Virtual Private Network connects to a dedicated server that is somewhere outside the nation in which you reside. The server provides a logical point of access to the internet that is not directly tied to the system that you use to access the internet. Though it might sound like a tool of some sort, a VPN is actually used as a means to unblock content. By getting this tunnel to an external server, you get a temporary connection to whatever content is online. The internet is not completely free and uninhibited. Content is often managed and regulated by various parties. Generally speaking, government censorship happens on a global scale. Just like TV networks and movie studios, they have their own set of censorship rules. Many content sites, such as Netflix, restrict access to certain countries only. While the servers in these regions are generally available, accessing them requires special permissions. If you're from a region that is not covered by these rules, you can't connect to their content by just knowing their IP address. A VPN can change the IP address of your computer and access the content at the same time. Due to that, it is often used to bypass internet filters and websites blocking certain types of content. Additionally, many VPNs also offer features that can help you stay anonymous online. If you are a student, for instance, you might want to access to websites that have a school filter. This makes it extremely hard to get past these restrictions. Surfshark has a program that allows you to bypass most of these. It is an open source, anonymous service that can change your IP address, making it easier to get past the internet access restrictions. There are some exceptions, though. The VPN provided by Surfshark isn't as robust as some

What's New in the?

Worsening your privacy Every VPN you use has some side effects on your internet connectivity. Surfshark is no exception, as it occasionally updates its IP database and, depending on the country you are connected, will collect your data. This means that the US or UK might get more data from you in the traffic you make in the US or UK. While this was already evident for less popular VPN services, this sometimes led to people being denied from accessing certain websites. For example, if you try to watch videos on Hulu.com using the UK service for example, you'll be regularly denied access. The feature is only available if you are a premium account user, and the services will be updated once a month. If you are not in the premium plan, then you'll just be able to connect the VPN from a device, and your connection will be able to work through the security layer. Not the best security policy Surfshark offers online security for its users by using a 128-bit military grade encryption for all online connections. This means that all of the data that you send to the provider is encrypted using one of the 128 different encryption keys. Because the passwords that you can use to connect to the service are based on a set of 10 letters, numbers and special characters, and because this does not allow you to make a 64-bit password. Surfshark's most obvious advantage is that not too many people will be able to access your data. For example, an adult will be able to connect to the service, but no child could. However, the real security concerns start when it comes to using the service. The main issue is that Surfshark actually tracks your usage. The provider will keep track of the websites that you visit, your IP address and your login details to the service. This means that Surfshark can become your surveillance partner and determine whether you are a potential target for an investigation. The provider will then be able to see that you have already visited websites that are related to espionage and surveillance, and this can be very helpful to the authorities that need a better picture of a person's activities. Surfshark can also tell that you're trying to visit websites that are related to viruses and trojans, which means that it can act as a performance booster. For example, this can translate into anti-virus software, and will be able to warn the user of the websites that you are visiting in the future. As you might expect from
