The emergence of resistance to conventional antimicrobial therapy in skin and soft tissue infections (SSTI) in France has led to the emergence of a new class of antifungal agent, the voriconazole. The aim of this study was to evaluate the tolerability of a new IV formulation of voriconazole under clinical conditions. One hundred and eleven patients were included in a prospective multicenter study from November 2000 to October 2001. The IV formulation studied was voriconazole; available strengths were 2mg/ml (n=22), 4 mg/ml (n=38), 6 mg/ml (n=43), 8 mg/ml (n=16). Outpatients were treated with a continuous IV infusion for at least 10 days, and patients hospitalized with a minimum duration of
