What's new:

In Casey and Kaitlyn's second adventure, featuring Jada, Casey, Raymond, Mia and Tori. Welcome to the Adventures of Casey & Kaitlyn! Warning: there's going to be a lot of Casey spitting, but that's just because he's a mo-bo-ah. But don't get the wrong idea. If you're a really patient person, you can watch with your eyes closed or maybe under the covers with a pillow over your head, but that's only if you can deal with the sounds. If that's not your forte, I advise you just to come back later. Casey's not very athletic, he can't dance for shit, and he's not on Twitter, and the only TV he watches is Dr. Phil. But you can still follow along, and maybe we'll have you in the next one. This is the second chapter of the Casey & Kaitlyn Adventure series, coming to an end with the third installment, Crime Dog Deep, featuring Mia, Casey, Raymond and Kaitlyn. CHAPTER 2: IT'S A BEAUTIFUL DAY TWO DAYS AFTER KAYTAYN WAS TRANSFERRED OVER TO THE BEEVILLE DEPARTMENT, KAYTAYN PRESSED THE HANG UP BUTTON on the phone. In the time since Tom Quinn passed away, Kaitlyn had kept herself busy by checking out all of his patient charts, familiarizing herself with each and every one of them, knowing they were better off with her than with anyone else, assuming she even wanted to be a physical therapist (is that like being a college volleyball player?), and burying herself in her work. What better thing to do? How many people have you seen crying and screaming about the pain in their knees or husbands beating their wives in the face? So many people with physical pain, every one of them waiting for a miracle. (If you're a writer and something rattles around in your head and you know you're not supposed to be thinking about it, you count to four and then put it out of your mind. Not Kaitlyn. She can think of three reasons Tom Quinn's death would be a good thing. But you'll see). Kaitlyn wasn't one of those people

I am developing an animal model system in which gonadal differentiation is controlled by the genotype of the hemizygous male. The model is based on the fact that mice homozygous for the autosomal recessive mutant globulin/albumin (Gab/a) and hemizygous for the X-linked mutant Pheru (Xpf) exhibit a wide variety of abnormalities when heterozygous for this Gab/a mutant and hemizygous for the X-linked Pheru mutant. In this breeding system the recessive mutant Gab/a is absent in the hemizygous males, and those males are hemizygous for the mutant Pheru. We intend to show that in this system the Gab/a gene is expressed in the gametes in order to establish the link between sex determination and the gene products of this mutant and to determine whether the sex-specific gamete products in the normal mouse are produced at an early stage of gametogenesis. We also intend to determine the biochemical basis for the Pheru gene product. In particular, we will characterize the nature and distribution of the glycoproteins associated with the X chromosome of the mutant and determine whether
