Identification of a novel SEC16A gene mutation associated with cutis laxa. Cutis laxa (CL) is a rare disease characterized by the slow elasticity of the skin. CL cases typically have a severe clinical course and are fatal due to rapid lung and heart failure. CL presents clinically as facial laxity, a thickened and lax neck skin, and an unevaluable abdomen. Currently, the CL disease causing genes are unknown and identification of novel candidate genes is the goal of this study. To identify the CL gene. A total of 865 subjects without CL were analyzed using 43 sets of cutis laxa and related genes. The presence of the family history for cutis laxa and differential diagnosis for cutis laxa were further analyzed. The mutational analysis identified a novel missense mutation (p.M476K) of the SEC16A gene. The novel mutation was identified in the patient and his parents, and was not found in the 865 subjects examined. SEC16A mutations should be considered in patients with CL. The Buckeyes chipped away at the Huskies lead in the middle innings, and cut it to one on the way to their first home run of the season. Duke Slater's three-run shot off the Huskies bullpen in the sixth was the difference maker. Ohio State had a 4-1 lead heading to the bottom of the seventh. Hensen kept Ohio State down to just one run in the bottom of the seventh. The Huskies seventh-inning rally was highlighted by second baseman Bobby Wilson's sacrifice fly to right. Hensen's two-out, three-run homer in the bottom of the eighth evened the score at 7-7. For the Huskies, the comeback was a much needed morale boost, as the squad had a disappointing weekend in California as the USA Baseball College World Series would
