“We’re building a system that combines the most authentic data available, which includes the velocity of every single movement in the whole team, from a player to the ball,” said Jonathan Wilson, FIFA Technical Director. “We are innovating in two key areas to tackle the way gamers perceive and play football.” “FIFA’s HyperMotion Technology is designed to create more realistic gameplay and extend the speed of on-the-ball action,” said Francois Auclair, General Manager of EA SPORTS FIFA. “The most exciting new addition to the FIFA franchise is ‘Live Training’. This is a new way to connect with the game, develop your tactics and get your tactics right before you take to the pitch.” Hypermotion Technology uses real-life player data during a whole match and collects the movements of 22 players - from the Ball to the Keeper - over the course of a complete, high-intensity football match. The data collection is done using motion-capture suits, fitted with HD cameras. The suits do not need to be motionless like previous versions and the player can run, pass, shoot, tackle, dribble, go in for a header or a throw. The information is extremely accurate and allows for all the movements in a single match to be captured. The videos captured are then fed into a match engine, which combines the data from all 22 players in one single match. This is the first time an entire team of players will be captured and used in a match engine. In addition, Soccer

Director and FIFA 22 Technical Director Michel Goulet will be analysing player psychology with the aim of making online football more tactically interactive in FIFA 22. Online footballing ability is something that is often criticised and Goulet feels that incorporating these data elements, such as live audience feedback via social media platforms, offers FIFA players the chance to grow in their online footballing abilities. FIFA 22 delivers immersive online game modes with the inclusion of Premier League, La Liga, Bundesliga and UEFA Champions League. A new, standalone story mode is also now available and FIFA Ultimate Team is more focused on helping players compete in online leagues. NEW STORY MODE – Pro Evolution Soccer 2018 LEGEND SERIES “Take it from us - it's the biggest, the best PES story mode ever!” PES 2018 released on the PlayStation 4, PlayStation 3 and PC and will with intellectual disability (ID) above reservation in government jobs continues to be debated. The ministry, which received the representations on the issue, said the ministry would consider the representation and come up with an appropriate measure/policy. “The move is taken keeping in mind the directives of the Supreme Court’s stand on such cases. But, it would be inappropriate to use this issue in the political dynamics,” a senior official privy to the development said. The official also said the ministry was of the opinion that a fixed order on such cases is not in the interest of the government. The apex
