Please help me in getting the service manual of this machine. A: Because of the 'Passage' (conduit) on the right side of the drawings you can ignore most of that, it is no maintenance. The EB12 is a tracked machine with wheels at the front, it looks like a container on two wheels. The two main controls are on the left, there's some controls under your feet as well. The tilt head is usually in the lower left corner. There are also sliders and switches on the left side. Image is just a rough layout, I'd advise to look at their official website or get the owner's manual for the EB12. The present invention relates to a cooling apparatus for use in a duplicating machine. A photographic copier is provided in the duplicating machine with a copying paper holder therein. The photographic copier includes in the machine a light source for projecting light onto the copying paper and a photographic material for developing the image of the copying paper on which the light has been projected. The resultant photographic image is visualized by a camera and is then printed on photographic paper. The duplicating machine is usually used for producing color prints of relatively small sizes. Therefore, the copying paper holder needs to be capable of holding about 4 or 6 original sheets of paper each. In the prior-art duplicating machines of the type described above, the copying paper holder is heated or provided with heated air by using a blower for forcing a heat-retaining air through the copying paper holder. In order to maintain the duplicating machine at a constant temperature, it is most important to force the heat-retaining air through the copying paper holder. The use of a blower for forcing the heat-retaining air through the copying paper holder, however, results in high air velocity in the copying paper holder. The air-flowing speed is apt to be increased and accompanied with rise in the temperature in the copying paper holder. As a result, the original sheet of paper, which has been placed on the copying paper holder, is forced to burn and be damaged. The copying paper holder is usually attached to a front panel in the duplicating machine. One conceivable way of eliminating the foregoing disadvantages is to provide a plurality of conventional blowers in the duplicating machine. The use of multiple blowers may, however, allow an accumulation of heat in the duplicating machine. This is true of particular in a duplicating machine which includes a convey 0cc13bf012
