It has come to our attention that a fair few of you have missed out on the opportunity to jump on the OASIS train and begin your adventurous journey as one of the first few recruited agents of the HAC. Now we're giving you a chance to fill that gap in your gaming knowledge and experience this tale of adventure before you and play it for free. How does this work? Greenlight lets publishers easily put their games into a portal and then allows gamers to vote on whether they want to see the game be made. Greenlight will allow you, the gamer, to decide whether the game gets published or not. Greenlight is a system where gamers can vote on whether or not a game should be published and how the game should look. Just imagine walking in to a game store and seeing a shelf with a big "HAC" sign on the front. That's what Greenlight is all about. I've been a Greenlight member since the start of the service, and I can tell you that Greenlight works. It's rather fun to jump in and see what you think of the game, then to either vote for or against a developer. I encourage all developers to consider the system, and everyone who likes and supports good games should get involved. Greenlight is all about letting gamers decide what games are made and what they look like. It's a way for publishers to get feedback on their games. The number of votes a game gets is directly proportional to how the game sold through those first 30 days. If a game sells well, then more votes will come in, and the game will look better. The game will be in the "Alpha" stage at launch. That means that the studio behind the game is essentially just building a map for the game, but all of the content within the game itself is being built from scratch. As such, as the game progresses, so does the production of content to accompany the game. The downside to the Alpha phase is that certain features and content will be lacking. The Beta stage will start a few months into the Alpha, and it will have a full game that is nearly complete. That's why we recommend that you sign up now. What do you mean by Alpha? The Alpha phase will kick off a couple of months after the game hits Greenlight. During this time the game will be playable, but without any of the bells and whistles that the Beta will have. During

Squad 'n' Prey is a sci-fi first-person shooter, focused on the single-player campaign mode and featuring online co-op. The game follows the story of "Simone Dezzia, a woman living on mars who gets kidnapped and sent to an unknown place". She is rescued by two men, "Dante Falcone and Conner Himmel", but soon they find themselves in a "war against hostile aliens". The game, targeted to work well on console, looks modern and alive with content and mechanics developed with the new modern consoles in mind. All the assets (weapons, items, vehicles, locations) are made of high quality and well-detailed. The environment and the gameplay are based on the "stealth" systems making the player's job easier. You and a friend can work together to face the enemies in a room-based game, the different classes of enemies are well balanced to achieve the "right" outcome for both you and your teammate. The players work in a level-based fashion and every room will have a specific difficulty level for each type of enemy: the player can choose to take as many as possible on the lower difficulty levels, but the higher difficulty levels require stronger skills. The stealth gameplay allows the player to approach the enemies from any direction and using multiple weapons sources. The story is turned into a dynamic campaign, as the number of enemies varies with the mission. As a small change from the previous titles, the weapons are now placed on the ground and the player is given a special perk that will help him/her to collect all the weapons with that one perk, making his/her life easier, and not having to use the "collect" button to reach the goal. Features: □ Incredibly detailed and alive environment (items, props and models) □ High-resolution detail and graphic quality □ A large selection of weapons: melee, rockets, smart-shooter, laser and plasma rifles □ Small-scale maps with dynamic enemies □ Different spawning system □ Stealth gameplay □ Features inspired by the new generation of consoles, such as multi-monitor, 1080p, 60fps, etc. □ Room-based FPS style □ Intelligent enemy AI □ Dynamic plot, based on the single-player campaign mode □ Different difficulty levels □ A physics-based platform system □ Tutorial made with Videogame Academy d41b202975

Playable Character Skins--Cole & Jackson are the two players who will be able to play as various characters in game: Cole a.k.a. Nanolock, a "high-ranking officer" in the Squad; and Jackson, a.k.a. Twitch, Nanolock's childhood friend and an NPC that joins Nanolock's team for Part 2. Gameplay Abilities: Grab, Chokehold, Stun--Sequel to Agent: Blacklist, gameplay features of the game have been borrowed from "classical gaming" conventions. These abilities can be used to grab, chokehold, and stun opponents. A location is both the space the player controls in the game and the space in which the player's character is located. There are many different game modes, a feature unique to the series. Contents Gameplay: Gameplay mechanics vary depending on the game mode. All game modes have 3 parts: introduction, a single stage map, and ending. In the introduction phase, the player can select a player, change the weapon, view the characters and their abilities, view the map, and set the team name. In the main map, the player navigates the map, explores the environment, fights enemies, and seeks to collect as much of a green cloud of pollution as possible. At the end of the game, the game displays the player's collected pollution score. If the player was playing online, their teammates' pollution score is also displayed. If there is a tie for pollution, the player is placed into a "Time Trial". If the player or their teammates wins the time trial, they receive double pollution. Development: The game development team consists of four people: four developers who program the game's map editor. And a game designer. Game Modes: Three modes are available in the game: Story Mode: A simple survival mode where the player must survive as long as they can. Achieving a high score allows the player to enter the Time Trial and win double pollution. Time Trial Mode: Play the game online. The game ends when the pollution meter of the player's or their teammates' team reaches a set value. The winner of the match receives double pollution. Shooting Range Mode: Players compete for a time limit to shoot as many green spaces as possible. Points are earned based on how many green spaces are successfully shot.

actually trying to find a good layman's primer on this topic, before getting sucked into the gory but fun-to-read (and play) details. Thanks. For the first time, engineers have precisely targeted a gene in Drosophila fruit fly embryos and changed the sequence to produce a new protein. They also may have silenced a gene that is involved with a type of cancer in mice; preliminary results from tests in mice have shown that the cancer is more susceptible to the treatment if the gene is not functioning. The work is from two independent groups, that each published its research on Feb. 28 in Science. The project was funded by the German cancer research association and the Ministry of Education and Research, the companion ministries of the European Union. The human genome contains about 20,000 genes, and most of the time these genes are inactive. In some types of cancer, however, the genome's machinery is turned on to produce proteins that aid tumor growth. But many proteins are involved in normal body functions, and scientists don't want them to be produced if the cells are being treated to fight cancer. To prevent this "byproduct" of cancer from being produced, in the first tumor-fighting project the researchers used a virus that targets genes by actually binding to a precise sequence in the genome and destroying the gene when it finds that particular sequence. The researchers called the new kind of antisense molecules "gene drive" after the mechanism of inheritance of the gene. The Drosophila researchers used this method to modify the gene drosophila genes drosophila to produce a protein that they wanted to be inactive in the fly's fruit fly embryos. The project used a pair of gene drive elements, allowing the team to change the sequence of the gene and turn off production of the unwanted protein. In the tumor-fighting work, the scientists used a pair of gene drive elements, but they modified them differently. One of the modifications disabled a cancer-promoting gene called Myc, turning off Myc protein production and causing the fruit flies to be more susceptible to cancer. The other element disabled a gene called Cas9, causing its possible use and production of the Cas9 RNA or protein to be reduced by more than 99 percent. The tumor-fighting fruit flies were treated with drugs that slow growth and
