To determine whether extended thromboprophylaxis is safe in the long term after total hip arthroplasty (THA) and whether a second dose of extended postoperative thromboprophylaxis may be more effective. In a double-blinded randomized controlled trial, 154 THA patients were randomized to receive either 100 mg of enoxaparin (E) or placebo (P) daily for 3 months. Two patients were withdrawn from the study, and 77 patients received a second dose of E or P during the subsequent 6-month follow-up period. During 3 months after THA, the overall rate of venous thromboembolism (VTE) in the E group was 2.1% and 1.4% in the P group (p = 0.52). During 6 months after THA, the overall rate of VTE in the E group was 2.5% and 1.7% in the P group (p = 0.55). A second dose of enoxaparin was administered in only two patients (2.5%). There were no differences in the incidence of major bleeding episodes between the E and P groups (6.5% versus 2.7%, respectively; p = 0.21). The use of extended thromboprophylaxis after THA did not appear to influence the incidence of VTE. A second dose of extended thromboprophylaxis may be indicated to prevent VTE, but it needs to be confirmed by a higher-powered study.Q: Unit testing the mongoose update I'm attempting to write a simple test for the update method of a mongoose schema.
