“HyperMotion technology brings fans closer to the sport they love than ever before by giving them a sense of what it’s like to play a complete football match. This is an exciting step forward for the video game industry and a real breakthrough in the way that gamers interact with the sport,” said EA SPORTS Executive Vice President Andrew Wilson. “We’re honored to be working with EAFC on this landmark experiment that will bring to life the sport of football on a level never before seen.” Everyone’s looking to FIFA 22, the next installment of the franchise that brought football to the masses. Today, EA SPORTS unveiled the game’s brand new “HyperMotion” feature, which is a “motion capture” technology to make you feel like you’re really out there in the stadium. HyperMotion Technology is powered by an all-new motion capture system that is capable of collecting and analyzing up to 22 player movements. Some of the more pertinent data is how fast players are moving, where they are moving, the distances they are traveling and how many players are touching the ball. To think that is massive and will change the video game industry forever. The technology has been described as “immersive,” by the developers for FIFA 22. The developer states that it’s a whole new way to feel like you’re playing in a stadium with over 50,000 people cheering you on. It’s a feature that we’ve been waiting on since FIFA 11, and while we didn’t get a game mode on next-gen consoles, EA’s Chief Competitive Officer, Peter

Moore, promised it would be one of next generation's biggest features. Additionally, the game will also introduce "field presentation," which is one of the biggest features we've been expecting to see. Field presentation is an added layer of realism to the presentation of the stadium on the game's field. According to a post on EA's blog, the visual art takes what we know for a stadium and makes it look like a 3D model, while also providing a photo-realistic view. It's also a nod to the old version of FIFA games, where we got a 3D model of the playing field. And then there's the new "FIFA World Experience," which replaces the Ultimate

Features Key:

- Create yourself a soccer legend - An all-new player creator takes you behind the scenes to experience the journey that a footballer goes through to reach the pinnacle of the sport.
- Visual interaction for every game action - When you score, intercept, shoot, pass, tackle, dribble, receive the ball or win a key phase, share it instantly with friends and fans.
- Camera-based graphics bring player faces to life - Enjoy clearer, more detailed player models that go beyond just facial features and really capture the emotions that make an athlete into a real character.
- New ways to play - Three new ways to play: Face off in a 9v9 hardcore match, play in a FIFA Ultimate Team Draft or Customise your playing style and create your own game modifications.
- Blazing fast gameplay, with AI improvements - The quickest FIFA in history, with
