The church is recorded in the National Heritage List for England as a designated Grade I listed building. It stands on a hill to the west of the city centre. History The church was built between 1828 and 1831 to designs by the Chester architect John Douglas. It was built on the site of the church of St Michael, which was demolished in 1832. The foundation stone was laid on 21 May 1828 and the church was consecrated on 22 July 1831. The nave and transepts were built in brick, and the chancel, south porch and tower were built in sandstone, with the entire church being built of limestone. A west gallery was added in 1852. This is the only building of its style in Chester. Architecture Exterior The church is built in brick with Bath stone dressings and a limestone slate roof. Its plan consists of a six-bay nave, a lower and upper aisles, a clerestory, a south porch and a five-bay chancel with a vestry to the north. In the lower two bays of the nave ca3bfb1094
