Light and day/night cycle

This game is FREE to play, although it has optional in-app purchases such as virtual goods.

You can play as a player or as a construction bot. Players can build whatever they like on the map - constructions include buildings, surfaces, bridges, reeds and roads. Each construction is reminiscent of an architectural design. You can deploy all structures automatically or do it manually. At the same time you can earn special damages such as lava spilling over, volcanic eruptions and player-induced disasters like floods, droughts and storms. When you get killed by another player you can call for help or deal with the situation yourself. The survivors win if no one gets killed.

Humans play Metaverse differently. Each human player can build a "home" (in the game this is called a "settlement"). Men will always be on the lookout for land to build a settlement. Women prefer to build a settlement with other women and to travel together. In areas of interest there are usually red circles marked on the map (these are always occupied by a living player at any given time). The better you play the more chances to survive you get. The game is over when one of the players reaches a certain score.

Unique mechanics:

- Map designs are reminiscent of famous areas
- You can assign teams before starting the game, so for example men and women can play with each other
- The game campaign revolves around two major routes along which players are naturally lured and also some special high-ranked settlements
- The game progression affects the quality and size of land
- Two maps are available for multiple levels of difficulty
- Users on a multiplayer server can be matched against each other
- User profiles are open for people of any gender, therefore you can play together with your beloved ones
- A chatlist allows you to talk to other players
- When you get killed by another player the AI controls your enemy for a time.
- In addition to natural history the game will also introduce UFO Topology
- Possibilities that you can purchase with real money are not

What's new:

The storm had been savage, and while many had survived, there were those missing. You know of the lost shards of her old body. She would wear rags, sell herself under bridges to buy water for those in need. Her mind had been that of an infant and she would cry out to the heavens. Her plight had affected Artemisia deeply, and she was hell bent on proving to the world that not all female gladiators were ugly and vile. Artemisia now strode down the long avenue of gladiators, dragging behind her her unloved sister Alabanda. The gladiators would not allow her entry this time, nor did she care. Tied to the back of a pacing warhound, was a bag fashioned from the clothing of those that died by order of the police. Alabanda was in such a state that she had no idea where she was going, or how she would ever find her way home. Artemisia, however, need only make three more stops. First stop was a side street where she had a local boy cum trapeze artist do a death-dance for those watching. Starving artists stutter out taunts to the defeated and beautiful of course, knock over the bowl of washers in the hopes of enticing a diner. The boy, a local boy though twice her age, could no longer help himself, and was soon spinning mid-air, the contents of a washers' bowl spilling on the cobblestones, as the gods smiled upon him. He landed hard, however, and was now being dragged away from the poor Jugger; by iron chains attached to his ankles. The crowd, despite themselves, cheered the boy and the act was deemed to be a death-dance. Such things worked in Europe, and if he continued to be more bloodied, then the burlesque crowd would have more reason to watch. After the Jugger was artfully bludgeoned with a hammer of her own invention, to elicit much more blood and thus, more murder, the locals dragged the boy away. Artemisia was hard of thinking and felt a pang, for not a single soul close to her age had the intellect to think for themselves, and such qualities are to be cherished. She walked through the crowd with her sword at the ready, her fist clenching and unclenching with her will to kill. She fought her way through the locals and made it
