various economic considerations as well as mobilization of resources are factors that affect the cost of care for patients with orthopaedic conditions, elective surgeries, and trauma. These factors are likely to affect the decisions of orthopaedic surgeons for performing elective procedures and choosing the best orthopaedic care option among available facilities. This study aimed at evaluating the correlation between the number of orthopaedic surgeons, the number of orthopaedic procedures, and surgical volume with the number of ventilators, equipment, and health care resources in Iran. A total of 184 hospitals were included in the study. In Iran, the hospitals were stratified based on the number of orthopaedic surgeons, and each hospital was given an orthopaedic surgeons to population ratio. Data were collected from the official website of the ministry of health and medical education of Iran.[@bib0004] The number of orthopaedic surgeons per 100 000 population was calculated and 6d1f23a050
