Currently, the consensus on perioperative drug administration is that it would be safe to introduce a small amount of systemic steroids preoperatively, especially when surgery is expected to cause significant bleeding or hypoxemia.[@R37] In addition, postoperative administration of systemic steroids has also been used in CD.[@R14] In our experience, postoperative administration of steroids is very effective and safe, except for the condition of CD patients with a risk of severe bleeding or severe hypoxemia, in which case preoperative administration is recommended.

Perioperative systemic steroids can control the symptoms of CD and prevent recurrence.

Infliximab is currently the most commonly used drug for the treatment of CD. Although its efficacy in CD is well documented, [R3] its application in paediatric patients has been limited because of its high cost, side effects and the requirement for specialised infusion facilities.
