A mathematical model of the brainstem is presented and analyzed to study the dynamics of the seizure. The model is based on a spiking neural network. Every node in the network represents a population of neurons, with excitatory and inhibitory neurons. The synapses from the inhibitory populations to the excitatory population cause the network to produce a stable periodic activity. At the beginning of the seizure, this activity is interrupted by the inhibitory populations, giving rise to seizure activity in the network. A linearized model of an excitatory population is used to study the dynamics of the seizure activity.N-hydroxyguanidines as cardioprotective agents.
