the app can now search for passwords on android for apps protected with a system-wide password. if you have a device protected with a password, and you launch the app for the first time, you will be prompted to enter the password. once the app is launched for the first time after the password is entered, the app will use that password to access all of the app's protected folders. our goal is to extract data from icloud backups from windows systems, but we need to bypass the icloud control panel. this is done using a special icloud control panel called `icloudcontrolpanel.exe`. the name suggests its purpose, which is to control and administer icloud. however, it turns out that this is a little more than that. after a thorough analysis, we noticed that `icloudcontrolpanel.exe` is the result of a deep injection, complete with its own anti-reverse shell. in other words, we can access the shell using a network connection. we observed that this happens through the hypertext transfer protocol (http) protocol, usually used for internet surfing. for internet surfing, we need to log in to websites, and if the user has not entered a password, we enter a default one. while this is the case, we were able to bypass `icloudcontrolpanel.exe` login process. furthermore, the tool offers us the ability to change the default password and change the user account password, if we have the credentials. once the icloudcontrolpanel.exe has logged in, it looks for the credentials for the icloud user. it checks for the user name, as well as the icloud password. when the credentials are found, it goes to the next step and starts downloading data from the icloud backup.
