in addition, the misc infantry in the game are extremely easy to see, have very little armor and do very little damage. they also very frequently stay out in the open for long periods of time without covering themselves, making any team hit a minor miracle to survive an attack from that direction without destroying a friendly. in war this is very important, but in the game this is a major liability. this feels extremely disingenuous. first of all it is a game of the third millennium, which means that it can be played on a console, on a phone, on a tablet or on a computer. but now you have made it so that a legitimate and true "pc" experience can not be had. you have made it so that every "console" experience can be had, but it won't feel like a pc experience. boneyard, the developer of men of war: assault squad, has also created one of the world's most expansive soundtracks to accompany his amazing music (check out his fantastic music at creativekmosh.com). men of war: assault squad is the next generation of tank action and is a solid debut release. if you're a fan of the men of war: assault squad series, i wouldn't hesitate to add this to your steam wishlist. in men of war: assault squad, players have the opportunity to play as national armies or as a commander of one of their nation's elite special forces units across five historical conflicts: polish-soviet war, battle of france, american war of independence, russian civil war and second world war. you can choose to play as the infantry, cavalry, tank crews, artillery, transportation vehicles or special forces units of five nations (us, germany, japan, uk and russia) across a vast campaign map covering the entire globe.
