the ais 600 has the ability to process gps position and speed information, correct for dynamic positioning, and calculate current position, accurate to the nearest square meter in approximately 4 seconds.source: http://www.garmin.com/products/ais-600 all the ais 600 displays are designed to have convenient, convenient access to key ais safety and environmental data. much of the setup work can be completed automatically. for instance, ais 600 automatically checks the ais radio frequency, then scans for nearby ais signals, and finally registers with its nearest ais-capable receiver. this eliminates the need for manual setup of the ais radio frequency and receiver. make sure you are using the latest version of the garmin software before starting your installation of the ais 600. if you have a garmin vhf receiver, you can access the ais 600's settings through a menu item on the vhf console display. based on your individual installation needs, the ais 600 requires: 1) a data modem and software to connect the ais 600 with your chartplotter, as well as with the ais receivers; 2) a gps signal-source antenna; and 3) a vhf receiver. if you want to fix your own ais 600 without replacing the device under warranty, the repair manual is part of the downloadable software. it appears that the primary pins from the srm switch are the same on the ais 600 and ais 200. please be careful with this repair. i found that i did not need any power from the main battery to run the srm wire through the seacock as long as i tested the srm pin with a multimeter. it appears that there are only two wires for the srm switch, but there is a separate wire that goes to the antenna. that is, in the case where you have the wire that goes to the antenna directly connected to your ais 600 port.
