the challenge ultimately failed and was upheld by the appellate court of malaysia in appeal no. 188 of 1994 . the view was that the provision was still a valid and valid part of the law under the malaysia constitution. the malaysian govt of today has attempted to rewrite the law and put all clauses back into it, so as to harmonize and enhance the law. all can, however, see the absurdity of the modern definition of "dietary restriction" and the motivation behind it. it has nothing to do with the malay concept of "pahala" (multiculturalism). it will only have the opposite effect of further instigating tensions and hatreds among races. perhaps there is need to search the malaysian ideology to find a more acceptable and progressive definition. as muslims, we cannot ignore the direct consequences of the law. as we are bound by this law, our duty of disclosure is now crucial. for those parents who would like their children to prepare for their unexpected islamic laws in the college, examination or other affairs, it is very important that their children are made to understand that the future consequences will be fatal if certain actions are taken. most of the time, this education comes from the parents. as parents, we have to communicate this to our children. parents of muslim children do not need to be embarrassed or fearful that their children will not be admitted into university or join the civil service. they can simply ask their children to prepare for the future in "anticipation of the future islamic laws". they can then release their children from any obligation of "eating their mothers-in-law and their fathers."

the muslims claim they did not have time. they did not have time to prepare their case. so they had to only use the limited time that they were given. that is their argument. but still, their case has to be considered and evaluated. it has to be thought about. it has to be analyzed. and that is what the court did. the court of appeal did not disregard, and therefore, did not ignore. when you say it is a narrow issue of constitutional interpretation. i don't think it is. i think that the muslims have another ground of appeal. another ground is that the court has committed procedural errors. the muslims say that the court did not follow the correct procedure. the muslims were not given a hearing in the first place. so what has been done is not fair. now since i said that the appeals are based on constitutional interpretation, what i would like to note is that the constitution does not say that we have to follow any of the procedures. the constitution is silent on what procedures we have to follow. the constitution is silent on the issue of procedure. thus, any procedures that we are following in any given case, is considered to be a matter of the discretion of the judge. now the reason for this is that normally, in normal criminal cases, the proceedings are adversary. the prosecution brings the charge against you. and you defend yourself. and this is a dichotomy. and the dichotomy is between the prosecution and the defence. the dichotomy is between the prosecution and the defence. the dichotomy is between the prosecution and the defendant. in appeals, we have this dichotomy reversed. 5ec8ef588b
