"Tomato Clock" is an extension for Firefox, based on the so-called "Pomodoro technique" for improved time management. The extension is easy to use and straightforward. It allows you to split your work time into sessions of 25 minutes each, followed by short 5-minute breaks. After four 25minute work sessions, the extension will announce you to take a more extended, 15-minute break. Such a time management technique keeps your mind fresh but focused on the job, as well. How this extension works: Tomato Clock is straightforward to use. It comes with four buttons, each with its function: Tomato, Short Break, Long Break, and Reset. Their names are self-explanatory. You can customize the timers, according to your needs and desires. To do that, right-click the extension's icon and go to Manage Extension, and then to Options. Once the countdown ends, the extension will send you a notification right in your browser, along with a sound alert. You can also reset the timers whenever you want. View your stats in Tomato Clock: This extension also allows users to view their stats per week, month, and so on. That means users can see how many "Tomatoes" they had during the selected interval and how many breaks, either short or long, they took.
